

Felicia Boyd

Felicia Boyd is the Program and Outreach Director for the Timucuan Parks Foundation, the Friend's group for the "Timucuan State and National Parks" – a partnership that includes the National Park Service, the Florida State Parks, and City preservation parks in Jacksonville that comprise the largest urban park system in the US. For the past 20 years, Felicia has been involved with developing and implementing environmental education programs and recruiting volunteers and citizen groups to help with outdoor projects. She and TPF staff and volunteers are currently working on an initiative to redefine the Timucuan Parks as a unique and non-traditional physical and mental health provider, thereby engaging a larger segment of the community and tying these vast natural resources to a healthy community.

Felicia is a Professional Geologist and the owner of an environmental consulting business. She and her husband are long-time residents of Jacksonville Beach and have three successful young adult children. Felicia loves being outdoors and has long enjoyed camping, hiking, biking, backpacking, and canoeing.
